FAST

Pace Followed by a Well Known

Lima Young Man

In Cincinnati Where He Paid Innumerable Debts With Worthless Checks

The Cincinnati Enquirer to day contains the following:

There has been considerable talk in political circles during the past few days in reference to the doings of a young stranger who recently made his advent in this city.

About ten days ago a young fellow was introduced to the representatives of the various daily news papers at the Central Police Station as L. H. Carty, of Lima, Ohio. The affable young stranger was said to be a bank clerk, having recently been employed at the Metropolitan bank in Lima. He seemed to possess a fondness for the society of reporters until his first appearance at police headquarters he was a mighty visitor at the City Hall. It seemed to have an abundant supply of funds which he spent with a lavish hand. This conduct much similar to that of the drunken sailor caused Carty to spring into popular favor as a bad fellow well met.

This state of affairs ceased to continue, however, as the thrifty young bank clerk was out of funds. He had his check book in his inside pocket and his knowledge of the banking business came into play.

Young Carty's first note was

TO WRITE A CHECK

which was cashed by his landlady at No. 135 W. Ninth street.

The check was given to the family grocer who turned it over to a butcher shop.

The next day Carty gave the check to a carpenter in town for some work and when it was paid it was discovered that the paper was worthless.

The carpenter sent the check back marked no funds with the following charges:

John the carpenter paid him $100.

D. L. L. the grocer paid him $100.

W. H. Mandeville, the butcher paid him $100.
